Cherokee Strip Boomers Take the Country at the Risk of Ejectment.

The Cherokee Strip Taken by

Associated Press. ARKANSAS CITY (Kan.), March 15. The boomers were stampeded into the Cherokee strip much the same as the cattle were stampeded out of it. They misconstrued the passage of the Oklahoma bill into an act providing for the immediate opening of the country to settlement, and each colony of boomers, alarmed lest it should not be first on the ground to select the choicest town-sites and claims, rushed pell mell over the border. The great majority are already settling down on claims as if assured of a permanent residence. They believe, now that the invasion has been ancomplished, the President will allow take up land whenever they arrive. The majority of the bona fide settlers carried on their wagons yesterday enough lumber to construct a small dwelling, and to-day the white tents and wagon covers that dot the prairies in all directions are being replaced with the less picturesque, but more substantial, board shanty. Especially is this the case in the center settle ment at Ponca-only yesterday a small station of 100 people—on the Santa Fe road, just over the line from Guthrie, in Oklahoma, which now has 3,000 inhabitants, sprung up over night. The gambling fraternity are here in full force. Monte man, the wheel of fortune and walnut shells with the illusive pea are all being manipulated in the open street with the usual degree of success. Several disturbances have occurred over these gambling devices and many fights took place, but nothing serious has resulted. At Guthrie last night a reporter boarded the train in which the representatives of the Cherokee Strip Cattle Company were returning from the Fort Worth Cattlemen's Convention. Hewings, the President of the Company The Britannic from Liverpool, the among the number. The first intimation they had of the invasion of their leased lands was gained at Guthrie. They could not believe it, but a few minutes later camp fires, surrounded by the invaders themselves, were seen glowing in the darkness and confirmed the report. The cattlemen are greatly disturbed at the invasion. and have appointed a committee to notify the Secretary of the Interior of the fact and ask for troops to restore to them the possession of their lands. No military force is on the ground now, and as far as known, none have been ordered to proceed thither. Captain Cavenaugh, commanding the forces at Guthrie, and Captain Burbank at Oklahoma City, have both officially notified General Merritt at Leavenworth, commanding the Department of Missonri, of the invasion, and the cattle company has requested protection from Washington. No reolles, so far as known, have been reserved to these dispatches, and so far, no orders have been given to move troops into the invaded country. The cattle men are completely routed. Their fences are cut, the grass burned, the cattle stampeded, and the ranges completely destroyed for the near future, at least. They will be compelled to get their cattle together as well as possible and hunt other pastures.

Professor Coppak of the Indian children's schools telegraphed last evening for troops to expel the boomers from the Indian school lands, as many not knowing its boundary had located

This is one of the latest stories told by the Rev. Joseph H. Witchell, of Hartford, Conn.: "There is an old Irishman in Hartford, a friend of mine, for whom I justly entertain a warm esteem, whose humble but thondrable calling is to collect the debris of the kitchen of our neighbors for the fattening of swine. I have frequent communication with him, at the close of one of which, lately, I expressed to him my hope that he might live a good while yet and prepare many a porker for the market. Thank ye, Mr. Twichell, he replied, thank ye, but I think not. When a man's rising seventy-five years its not many more pigs he'il fat. O'm in no hnrry to go, but am ready; for I didn't do anything very bad—anyway I didn't mane to. But O'm content to stay—because Mr. Twitchell, when ye are here, ye know where ye are."

There is a good deal in that last remark. When the Indian was asked if he was lost and answered, "No, wickiup lost; Injun here," he had the same idea. And to realize the full force of the remark we need not discuss such serious questions as death and immortality.

The Salt Lake Tribune says: The man who, in whatever occupation, carries in his face the answer that he knows where he is always succeeds. When a man commits a speech to memory, and upon getting up to deliver it cannot recall a word, it needs no prompter to inform the audience that he is not sure of his own location. Being pretty sure of one's real place is the thing above all other things to be desired in this world and the next. The more one reads the remark of that old swill-gatherer the more he will respect him. To be as sure of the next world has been the worry of devout men ever since the crucifixion, and the best of them will have a mighty thankful feeling if beyond the Dark they can awaken, and under the emerald arches repeat the old swill-gatherer's words.

Ir must have shaken up the Mugwumps at Harvard to have the truth told so plainly as it was by Colonel Hallowell at the meeting Garrison could make was that composed of men who believe in said: caste. showing up some of the corruption existing among Democratic county officers in that city. The county officers in that city. The great journal is evidently not very proud of its political friends, yet it seems to consider the slume of New York better judges of what the country needs than the solid yeomanry of the Republican rural districts.

An Indiana country declitor received a gift of a barrel of very hard cider from an admiring subscriber, and the next three issues of his paper brought him seven libel suits, four lickings and a notice of his dismissal from the fold of the hard-shell Baptist church. When an humble editor uses hard cider for inside matter the results sometimes verge on the terrible.

The majority of the North Da-kota House has done itself honor.

Even 250,000 bushe's of seed wheat for needy farmers and $150,000 a year for the State could not buy them to admit the Louisans Lottery. All the seed required can be obtained by other means, and the State Government will not become for needy farmers and $150,000 State Government will not become a partner in a gambling house.

THE French newspapers declare that the dance as a social joy is doomed, going out of fashion at the command of the women who lead Parisian society.

A CAREFULLY compiled table shows, on the Congressional vote of 1888, that Protection carried the Northern States by 500,000.

AN IDEAL HUSBAND.

At a gathering of young ladies one evening last week one of them proposed that the party draw up in a circle, and each in turn give her opinion as to the qualifications of an ideal husband. It was immediately agreed to, says the Milwaukee Wisconsin, and oh! the diversity of prerequisites would cause a man to fear and tremble as to his accentableness even were he an angel sans and the week of this medicine over all blood diseases:

"My son, 7 years old, had a white swelling come on his right leg below the knee, which contracted the muscles so that his leg was drawn up at right angles. Physicians lanced the swelling, which discharged freely, lanced the swelling which discharged freely. ceptableness even were he an angel sans wings. One wanted a rich man, one a famous one, another a handsome one; some wanted a title, and most of them wanted all these things combined.

At last it came the turn of a sweet, sunny little creature in pink and white. For a moment her face grew serious, and then came her verdict:

"He must be moral, well-bred, and have some fixed and honorable method what! not one word about his being titled, rich or handsome!

"But," she continued, "the man I marry must be my other self. He must be sympathetic with me in my tastes and pursuits. When he comes I shall know him, and all the love I have to give shall be his, and I shall expect love in return for love. Of course, if he is young and rich and handsome so much the better, but I should not love him

True womanly sentiments! Would that they could find an echo in every woman's heart. The number of unhappy marriages would be lessened, and divorce unknown. Many, fascinated by outward glamor, rush headlong into matrimony, and too late find that the tastes and inclinations of husband and wife differ as widely as night and day. For instance, one is literary and fond of retirement, the other despises literature and is inclined to society; each will nat-urally seek the society and conversation of those whose tastes and opinions coincide with his own. The consequence is an estrangement of husband and wife in things the world calls trivial, but which, in reality, decide their happiness; and each would find it easy to sacrifice all the other's charms for the one charm not there, namely, a responsive heart in

JUVENILE FLIRTATION.

The Stick of Candy Given by the Small Boy to the Small Girl. She is just the sweetest child that ever was born, says the San Francisco Chronicle. She has Titian red hair, and ivory skin, and blue eyes, and when she grows up she will make the med stand around. Then she will marry a plain, bald-headed man, and be lost to the beautiful world, and people will wonder why such a beautiful girl should throw herself away. Because she has sense, and no woman of sense would marry a man as good-looking as she was. But she is only two years old yet; yet she is simply the sweetest thing that ever lived. No. It is not her "mother says" so." It is her godmother; and if it comes to that, a godmother can think more of her godchild than the real, simple, plain, ordinary mother. Every child should have a godmother. It is better than being born with a "caul." Perhaps you doubt this god-mother's word But she must have been a pretty child, for her mother took her of the Historical Society of the college. The best point of Hallowell's speech, which was in favor of the negro, was directed against the grandson of William Lloyd Garrison, who presided at the meeting. He read to the meeting the read to the read to the meeting the read to the read in the car one day and she dropped her like to because he thinks every body meeting. He read an article that will notice. The small boy simply garrison wrote for publication, degree at the beautiful child and after a claring that "the negro is absolutely little hesitation he walked over boldly untrustworthy," and the only reply and put into her hand a lovely stick of when he did that. A man may be this was written two years ago.

Hallowell also hit the college and not be much smitten after all, hard when he said it had free wool but when a boy gives up his candy he is clubs, but no free ballot club. The clean gone. The small beauty took it San Francisco Chronicle says: The trouble with both Harvard and ing his satisfaction. The child held Yale is that the faculty is mainly the candy for a few seconds. Then she

The following seems to be the latest "thing one would rather have left unsaid." A planist recently spent the evening at the house of a lady. The company was agreeable and he stayed somewhat late. As he rose to take his departure the lady said: "Pray don't go yet, Mr. Jones; I want you to play something for me." "Oh, you must excuse me to-night; it is very late, and I should disturb the neighbors." "Never mind the neighbors." answered the young lady, quickly; "they poisoned our dog yesterday."

These Are the Books

We Are Giving Away

This book contains 480 pages; is eight and one-half inches long, six inches wide and two inches thick. It is printed on extra heavy paper and is handsomely bound, with embossed cover and gilt-lettered back.
It is different from all other works ever published. First—It teaches those who have it how to tell what the matter is when a person gets sick.

LOWEST PRICES

All similar books tell what to do if you know what the disease is. This book tells you HOW TO DETECT THE DISEASE, and then what to do for it.

Second-When a person is really attacked by a dangerous disease, it enables you to know the fact, and in such cases its advice is: "Send for a competent physician at once." But in all ordinary cases, such as can be easily cured, it gives full directions for treatment.

Third—It is not confined to the practice used by any one class of physicians; but it gives, separately, and for each disease, the methods used by each of the different schools of medicine, and in ALL CASES the PRE-SCRIPTIONS ARE MADE by the MOST EMINENT MEN id their respective modes of practice. This makes the work specially suited to the needs of every family, no matter what med ical school they prefer.

TESTIMONIALS: Having examined the advance sheets of the work entitled "Our Family Physician," I can say that I find it accurate in its descriptions of diseases and reliable in its theraputical department.

on hand, and we invite inspection.

There are three chapters in the "Family Physician" which are worthy of special mention, namely, those on "Diseases of Women," "seases of Infants" and "Care of the sick."

The first of these is a model of its kind. It is chaste in lancuage, contains no disguistic g pictures for children to happen on and be overcurious ab uni, and taken altogether is the most practical, sen ble and straight forward treatise upon this delicate subject that has ever been printed.

This chapter alone is worth many times the cost of the book to every mother, even if it had to be purchased at its regular price.

The other chapters referred to are equally well written and valuable, see "Our Plan" on 4th page.

It is enstomary with newspapers to give premiums to new subscribers only; but the publishers of the Weekly Gazert a mean to revise this of trule; they intend to do as well, at le st, by their old subscribers—the who have been to be subscribers—the who have been the paper in years past, and paid their money for it "right straightalong." A SECRET VALLEY TRIP.

The Elko Independent of the 13th inst. contains the following: The writer returned last night from a trip Secret valley. The situation there is not promising, and nearly every one has lost more or less stock. The feed in that locality is almost exhausted, and, unless the weather moderates immediately, there will still be more or less loss. The snow is still deep over the greater part of the valley, but a few days of warm sunshine will leave the southern slopes of the hills so that stock will be able to live. There are mmense snowdrifts in the mountains, though with care a team can get through without much difficulty. In through without much difficulty. In going over last Monday the sleigh upset and this scribe, who was the only passenger, was pitched down a steep bank about forty feet head foremost into the deep snow, but fortunately without serious injury. In returning yesterday the mail came over the mountains in a light sleigh with four horses, and we got through in good shape.

At Halleck last night we met J. D. Bradley, of the firms of Mason & Bradley and J. R. Bradley & Sons. Mr. Bradley says the whole country is strewn with dead cattle, and that at one place near Deeth he could show 400 corresponding a distance of 400. one place near Deeth he could show 400 carcasses in a distance of 400 yards. He estimates their losses at between 30 and 40 per cent. He thinks the estimated loss of $750,000 worth of stock in the country is entirely too low, and believes the assessment will show the loss to be much greater. While it is a fact that cattle which have been well fed could not all be saved, almost everyone in the country having lost more or less, the chances for range stock can be imagined.

"It is an ill wind that blows no good," and while there is much to regret there is a fine prospect in the future for all kinds of stock that do get through, as the immense supply of snow insures fine feed on the ranges and an ample water supply for irtigation and consequent bountiful crops of every agricultural product. Another such year as the last one would have been a death blow to every interest on account of drought, and while the past winter has been a fearful one on all who are interested in stock, there is hope for the future.

It is surmised that, feeling unwell during the night, Holland had left the premises for the purpose of having Dr.

Death is supposed to have resulted from heart failure, produced by excessive indulgence in alcoholic stimulants, to which deceased had been addicted for several years.

The Attraction Next Thursday It need not be said of the p ance given in "Monte Cristo" by James O'Neill that it is in the largest sense artistic and interesting. As Mr. O'Neill adheres to it season after season, however, it cannot be overlooked that years are being added to his age and though they rest as lightly as sunshine on his head, the question must sconer or later arise, whether he is losing that buoyancy of action, singular grace of manner, sweet sympathy of voice and unvarying evane the spirit he imparts to his work. These are the rare and beautiful qualities which tings Mr. O'Neill's art with a delightful sense of romanticism seldom seen elsewhere. His portrayal of the dual characters of the play, Edmond Dantes and Count of Monte Cristo, is up to the high standard Mr. O'Neill has set. The sailor lad of the first acts was of the sea salty, an ardent lover with a heart-beat like the swelling tide he rode and an air as fresh as a spanking breeze. The transition to the aventing instrument of a just and omnipotent God was reached by natural stages, so it seemed, and sustained by processes as intellectual as they are artistic. Through the later scenes of the play Mr. O'Neill envelopes himself in a religious fervor, which touches the sensibilities of people who can feel the subtle influence of so common a thing as the glimpsing light in a cathedral isle. The fercoity of the part is always held in check by a reverent awe of powers unrevealed, but the effect is one of intense purpose and fine accomplishment. Mr. O'Neill is magnetic in temperament and indescribably happy in style. All his attitudes suggest pictures. Mr. O'Neill is assisted in his representation of the play by many excellent actors. The seenery has been the spirit he imparts to his work.

well in ordinary winters, were heavy sufferers this year, while cattle and slicep which ranged in localities where there was tall black sagebrush lived at least, through the storm, because they could browse on the brush.

Among those whose flocks ranged in a white sage locality was John O'Kane of Lovelock's. The snow covered the ground thirty inches deep, and nothing remained above its surface but a strip of black sage a few yards wide along a ravine. Mr. O'Kane and his herder broke a trail with their own feet a distance of fifteen miles, with the mercury over 20° below zero. They suffered intensely, but it was the only way they could save their slicep, and by doing to they got through with about 70 per cent. of the flocks.

THE LESSON OF LIFE.

Poor Narcissa's Was a Bitter One Indeed.

"Poor Charliel" said Miss Minden croft. "I am very sorry for him-very, indeed-but a woman with a career be fore her can't be encumbered with such a husband as that!"

Narcissa Mindencroft stood before the full-length mirror that was vailed in white muslin and swinging between gilded standards, a proud, imperious beauty of nineteen.

"My dear," said sage Mrs. Nerol, "isn't Mr. Dallas the same that he was a year ago, when you first became engaged to him?"

"I suppose so," said Narcissa, half reluctantly. "But it is I that have changed, Mrs. Nerol. Signor Ferroni says that there is a fortune in my voice. I am to be trained for the operatic stage.

I am to travel in Italy and study six hours a day. Charlie wants me to marry him and settle down as a mere drudging housekeeper! The idea!"

"That is all nonsense, Narcissa," said is the last person in the world to expect his wife to become what you term a drudging housekeeper."

"It's all the same thing," said the olive-cheeked beauty. "I don't think I shall marry at all, to tell the truth!" Mrs. Nerol shook her head sadly. She knew the nature of the brilliant, proud, spirited young creature too well to attempt any remonstrance with her.

So Narcissa Mindencroft went to Italy to study for the operatic stage, with her maid and a grim, spectacled old lady, who wore dyed black silks and talked monotonously about "having seen better days." Charles Dallaswas left behind— a part of the past which seemed to Narcissa as nothing in regard to her radiant Scarcely five years had passed since she stepped upon the deck of the Eu-ropean steamer and we see her again sitting solitary and alone in the sec story back room of a third-rate New York boarding-house. The Roman fever had smitten her down just as she was about to reap the laurel crown of suc-cess, and after a horrible dream of fevered pain she had recovered consciousness only to realize that she had utterly lost the fine, delicate timbre of her voice, and-more terrible than allthat she was quite penniless and de-serted even by the old lady who "had "Not contagious," the old lady had said, hurriedly flinging her belongings into a bag when first Miss Mindencroft had been taken ill. "Ah—it's very well for the doctors to say so—but who can be certain that it is really so? I've my own interests to look to, and I never vas of any particular use in a sick

So Narcissa had come back to her native city, humble and chastened in spirit, to find every thing totally changed. Good old Mrs. Nerol was dead. No one knew any thing of Charlie Dallas—and the poor girl put an advertisement for music pupils into the papers and counted over the slender contents of her purse with the terrible fear lest they should give out before there were any prospects

Apparently, however, nobody was par-ticularly desirous of availing himself of the services of "a young person who had been educated in the best Italian school for the voice and piano," and Narcissa's Carriages, Wagons, Carts, Etc prospects were getting decidedly dispiriting, when Mrs. Miller, the organist of the chapel, where she crept daily to say her prayers, accosted her one day.

"Miss Mindencroft," she said, abruptly, yet not unkindly, "I think you told me you could sing?"

e you could sing?"
"I can—a little," said Narcissa, meekly.

"Do you think you could undertake two or three ballads at a wire?" asked Mrs. Miller. "'Dreaming,' 'When Swallows Bulld,' an aria from 'Martha,' or something of that kind? A friend of mine was engaged to sing at Mrs. Dayton's on the twentieth of the month, but she has a sore throat and I am commissioned to find a substitute."

"Oh!" cried Narcissa, with a fluttering heart, "I would be so glad of the opportunity. I would do my very, very best!"

"Have you a piano at your lodgings?"
asked Mrs. Miller.

Narcissa colored and shook her head.

"Then we will go to my house and try your voice," said Mrs. Miller.

The verdict was:
"Not bad. Your voice is tolerably sweet, but not strong. I dare say, however, it may do for this occasion."
Poor Narcissa. This "faint praise" was a contrast to what she had expected when she had first trained her fresh young voice for the applause of breathless thousands. But she stiffed her mertification and smiled her gratitude for Mrs. Miller's encouragement and recommendation. And then she went home to practice her ballads and make the best bargain she could with old Madame Monise; who kent a second. old Madame Monise; who kept a second hand clothing emporium, for one even ing's use of a dark blue silk dress trimmed with black lace, which was not so very much worn! For Narcissa had nothing of her own but the plainest black alpaca, and a well-worn olive green serge, neither of which costumes however respectable in themselves were exactly adapted to the splendors of Mrs. Dayton's ball-rooms.

The eventful evening arrived at last, and the professional balladist found herself seated at the piano, among the glittering throng. She need not have been so nervous, nobody took any notice of her beyond the merest passing glance. Mrs. Dayton herself, a sweet-faced blonde in white satin and pearls, came up to the singer when her first little song was finished, and thanked her pleasantly.

"I will send a waiter to you with a glass of wine," said Mrs. Dayton. "You must be tired."

So until the time for her next song should come Narcissa sat quietly watch ing the dancers, the promenaders, the inevitable flirters, while one Herr Sobieski did musical wonders upon the violin. Presently she saw in the flower-garlanded portal of the door a tall figure which she knew well, though years had elapsed since last she looked upon it—Charles Dallas' self.

She turned to the plump, elderly lady who sat next her, eating forced straw berries and cream with a countenance of the serenest satisfaction. "Who is that gentleman by the door?"

she asked. "The gentleman talking to Mrs. Dayton?" The plump lady paused, with a straw berry as plump as herself poised upon her gold spoon.

"Why," said she, "it's Mr. Dayton, to Dallas inherited a fortune fit for a Prince, with only the condition that he should add the surname of the old miser-Dayton-to his own. Dallas-Dayton, it is printed on the cards; and his wife was a great heiress, too; she was Miss Moneyman, of the firm of 'William Moneyman & Co.' But Mrs. Nerol, with spirit. "Charlie Dallas I am told the marriage was quite a lovematch. You can easily see how devoted they are to each other, Mr. Dayton met with quite a disappointment early in life, I have heard; but it is easy to perceive"—with a complacent chuckle— "that the old wound is entirely healed by this time." So Narcissa Mindencroft sang her second ballad and her third, and received her check for ten dollars from Mrs. Dallas-Dayton's gracious hand and went home, quite unnoticed and unrecognized by the man to whom her smile or her frown had once been like a second fate! There were a great many people there, and it was scarcely to be expected that the host should seek out the paid bailad singer who trilled her notes for the amusement of her guests, any more than But life has its shadows as well as its she should distinguish Herr Sobieski or sunshine and poor Narcissa's path was Signor Tremelini who played the violin and "did" the cornet solos.

Raw Oysters Self-Digestive. "Fothergill on Indigestion," in speaking of the oyster being eaten habitually and by preference in the raw or un-cooked state, says: "It is interesting to know that there is a sound physiological reason at the bottom of this prefernce. The fawn-colored mass which constitutes the dainty of the oyster is its liver, and this is little less than a mass of glycogen; associated with the glycogen, but witheld from actual con-tact with it during life, is its appropriate digestive ferment—the hepatic diastace. The mere crushing between the teeth brings these two bodies together, and the glycogen is at once digested, with-out other help, by its own diastace. The oyster in the uncooked state, or merely warmed, is, in fact, self-digestive. But the advantage of this provision is wholly lost by cooking, for the heat employed immediately destroys the associated ferment, and the cooked oyster has to be digested like any other food by the eater's own digestive powers.'

"Fat men," said a well-known physician, "are the most gullible creatures on earth. No end of patent-medicine sharps have made big fortunes purely by the manner in which they have preyed upon the prejudices of men who convey superfluous flesh around with them, and there would seem to be absotutely no nostrum too nonsensicator ab-surd for a fat man to reject. The merest tyro in matters relating to hygiene tyro in matters relating to hygiene knows perfectly well that the only reasonable way for a man of abundant flesh to reduce himself is by exercise, then, as he grows thinner, his muscles harden and he increases in strength, but inordinate fat predisposes a man to inertia and languor, and so fat men try to reduce themselves by medicines and medical remedies of various sorts. "Then we will be a my hours and the LITTLE HOME COMFORTS.

How the House-Mistress Can Avoid Fric-tion in Her Domains. Little things often jar and annoy, and so little things involve comfort, not alone for ourselves but for others. A happy home is not necessially descentible. sarily one possessing rich decoration and magnificent furnishing, says Harp-er's Bazar, for even amidst such ap-pointments if the motto "A place for every thing and every thing in its place" be not observed, the house-mistress will find friction in her domains. There is often nothing so much needed as is a place of brown wrapping paper, but to obtain this the entire household must be put into confusion, drawers and closets be hopelessly ransacked, and finally the package will be wrapped in the morning paper, though before night this very paper shall be asked for by the cha-grined and disappointed head of the house. Yet quantities of wrapping paper are brought into every home, only to be thoughtlessly burned or hopelessly crumpled. All the annoyance and vexation caused by the want of this could be saved by enforcing a rigid rule to properly care for this paper. When a package is left, smooth out the wrinkles necessarily made in the wrapper, and then fold and place it in the closet and on the shelf previously selected. Tissue paper should be treated in the same manner, and put carefully aside for future use; and newspapers, which are frequently needed for reference, should have a place of their own. If only regarded as valuable for kindling purposes, it saves time to be able to go directly to the spot where they are kept. Paper bags should also be preserved. No one knows until she hears the demands of daily wants just what will be needed, and it is a great economy of both time and strength to find at once the required article. Also have a place for card-board and paper boxes. They are precisely the thing for flowers, feathers and laces, protecting them much more safely than will paper. Se-lect a few of varied size and shape, and be careful to keep your stock well supplied. If you can not afford to assign a part of a closet to their uses, then put them on top of a wardrobe or closet, in-stead of discommoding yourself by crowding every nook and cranny within. A convenient and accessible place would be over the closets usually found in the passageway between sleeping apartments. Be prudent also and keep your cord and twine. After rolling and fastening the same, place in two pasteboard boxes, leaving one in the kitchen closet for the many uses of the laundry-maid. For example, she runs a strong cord through the button-holes of the collars and cuffs, ties the ends of the cord between two lengths of the clothes-line, so saving space on the line, and the annoyance of separately fastening each piece of linen by a clothes-pin. Having placed the box conveniently for kitchen uses, put another in the closet most accessible for the entire family. Besides these, have dainty silk-covered balls of twine in the library and other parts of the house. They will prove a pretty as well as useful ornament for any room, and if to the same you will attach a small pair of scissors, these also will be found a grea convenience. And what can be said regarding the hunt for writing-paper and lead-pencils? Not only the family but the servants should know where to find at once the requisites for writing a brief note. Frequently messages are left with a maid when it is not safe to trust an important matter to her memory. So, to avoid mistakes, and for a variety of reasons, keep a pad of paper and two well-sharpened lead-pencils — in case one should meet with accident-in the drawer of your hat rack, or some equally convenient place. In large families a nad when to lock the hall door. Writing-paper, envelopes, lead-pencils, pens, pen-holders and good black ink should be a part of the furnishing of your guest-chamber. It is very inconvenient as well as embarrassing for a visitor to be obliged to ask permission to write a note or letter, and when friends come unprovided with their own stationery do not let them miss their own home comforts, but have all the little necessary things within easy reach. It is not rich upholstery nor dainty frescoing which they will take away as pleasant memories, but the warmth, cheer and thoughtfulness that kept them from missing the charm of their own home life. How strained become our nerves and how impatient our words when looking for a butten-hook or the pins if a visitor is kept waiting, or an engagement that demands immediate attention is delayed! The Bible says: "The little foxes spoil the vines." Happy is the mistress whose furnishing of home is such that the little needed things are not forgotten!

Baroness E.'s Eccentricity. A Baroness E-, the widow of the last Swedish Governor of Sweaborg, who surrendered the fortress to the Russian troops in 1809, was very beautiful in her younger days. When Alexander the First went to Helsingfors to open the Finland Parliament, a ball was given in his honor, and he led off the dance with the General's wife (Baroness E-), and with his usual gallantry kissed her hand. The lady lecided to carry that kiss with her to the grave, and from that hour she never washed her right hand, but always wore a kid glove. In herold age this peculiar a kid glove. In herold age this peculiar habit proved, shall we say, somewhat offensive, and she found it difficult to induce people of her own rank and station to join her at a game of whist. To gratify this, her only passion, she offered free board, lodgings and elothing to three poor students at the university, whose only obligation was to play whist with the old Baroness for a couple of hours every evening.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Vessels Built of Paper.

The German naval authorities said to have been making experiments lately with a torpedo boat built of com-pressed paper. The vessel is eleven feet long and was found to show great strength and more elasticity when nmed by another boat.

MISCELLANFOUS.

The equivalent, in English money, of $2,500 was once offered by an old lady in London for the return of a favorite cat which had strayed or been stolen. People called her a "crank." and perhaps she was. It is unfortunate that one of the gentler sex should ever gain this title, yet many do. It is, however, frequently not their fault. Often functional derangements will apparently change a woman's entire nature. Don't blame such sufferers if they are "cranky," but tell them to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which is an infallible remedy for "female weaknesses."
